(Oxnard District Office)

OPINION AND ORDER
DENYING PETITION FOR
RECONSIDERATION

15 Defendant Federal Insurance Company (Federal), a part of Chubb Group Of Insurance 16 Companies, petitions for reconsideration of the June 3, 2016 Findings Of Fact of the workers' 17 compensation administrative law judge (WCJ) on behalf of the defendant employers it insured, including 18 Tampa Bay Lightning (Tampa Bay), Florida Panthers (Panthers), Pittsburgh Penguins (Pittsburgh), 19 Toronto Maple Leafs (Toronto), and Carolina Hurricanes (Carolina). The WCJ found in full that "[t]he 20 California Workers' Compensation Appeals Board [WCAB] has jurisdiction in this matter as to each 21 defendant."

22 Applicant claims he sustained cumulative industrial injury to multiple body parts while working 23 for defendant employers as a professional hockey player from September 1, 1986 through March 1, 2009.

24 Defendant cites Federal Insurance Co. v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (Johnson) (2013) 221 25 Cal.App.4th 1116 [78 Cal.Comp.Cases 1257] (Johnson) in support of its contention that the number of 26 California games and practices applicant participated in does not provide sufficient relationship with this 27 state to hold defendants liable under California's workers' compensation law as a matter of due process.
Defendant further contends that the WCJ failed to consider evidence of extra-territorial provisions in

1 Florida law that provide for reciprocity with California in accordance with Labor Code section 3600.5(b) 2 and that supports dismissal of the Panthers as a defendant.<sup>1</sup>

3 An answer was received from applicant. The WCJ provided a Report and Recommendation on 4 Petition for Reconsideration (Report) recommending that reconsideration be denied.

5 Having carefully reviewed the record, the petition, the answer and the Report, reconsideration is 6 denied for the reasons expressed in the Report, which is incorporated by this reference, and for the 7 reasons below. California has a legitimate and substantial interest in assuring that workers injured in the 8 course of performing employment duties within this state receive workers' compensation as in this case.
9 There is more than a de minimis connection between applicant's work in this state and his claimed 10 cumulative injury and California's workers' compensation laws may be applied in this case consistent 11 with the defendant's right to due process.

12 BACKGROUND

13 Applicant was employed as a professional hockey player in the National Hockey League (NHL) 14 for 22 years from 1986 through 2009. He worked for several employers in the NHL over that time, 15 including Calgary from September 1, 1986 to August 25, 1997, Carolina from August 25, 1997 to July 4, 16 2000, Toronto from July 4, 2000 to August 1, 2005, Panthers from August 1, 2005 to February 27, 2007, 17 Pittsburgh from February 27, 2007 to June 28, 2008, and Tampa Bay from June 28, 2008 to March 3, 18 2009. None of applicant's employment contracts were made in California and he was never hired in this 19 state.

20 Over the course of his NHL career, applicant practiced for and played in 1,399 total games, 59 of 21 which were in California. (Applicant's Exhibit 2; Defendant's Exhibit B; April 27, 2016 Minutes of 22 Hearing (MOH) 5:12-16.) While playing in California, applicant sustained injuries to his neck, which 23 later required two surgeries in this state and other medical treatment by California providers. (MOH 4:5-24 26.) In addition, applicant sustained injuries to his knees, shoulders, leg, and head, including 25 concussions, during games in San Jose and Los Angeles. (Id., 5:1-12.)

26
27 <sup>1</sup> Further statutory references are to the Labor Code.

1 After applicant filed his claim of cumulative trauma industrial injury in California, the defendants 2 insured by Federal challenged WCAB jurisdiction, citing Johnson. The sole issue of “jurisdiction” was 3 tried before the WCJ on April 27, 2016. (MOH, 2:24.) On June 3, 2016, the WCJ issued his decision 4 finding “jurisdiction,” as set forth above.

5 The WCJ explains the reason for his decision in his Report as follows:

6 Applicant produced documentary and testimonial evidence of applicant’s 7 work, throughout the years, in the State of California and elsewhere.

8 Although applicant was hired in various locations throughout the United 9 States, he had significant contacts with the State of California, including 10 playing some fifty-nine (59) professional hockey games in California over 11 the course of his career.

12 In [Johnson], a professional basketball player had played only one 13 professional game in the state of California, had never received medical 14 treatment in California and ‘suffered no specific injury in California.’ (Id.
15 at 1119) The court opined that, ‘[i]f the workers’ compensation law of 16 another state exclusively should apply and California does not have a 17 sufficient contact with the matter, California must, under the full faith and 18 credit clause, accede to the other state to provide a forum.’ (Id. at 1123) 19 However, the ‘forum state can grant relief if it has some substantial interest 20 in the matter.’ (Id. at 1124) The court states that, ‘the test is not whether 21 the interest of the forum state is relatively greater, but only whether it is 22 legitimate and substantial in itself.’ (Id.)

23 The California Workers’ Compensation Act applies to a worker injured 24 while working in California even if the worker is employed in another 25 state...

26 Here, the applicant participated in some fifty-nine (59) professional hockey 27 games in California, essentially equivalent to two-thirds of an entire NHL season (84 games).

The applicant testified that he sustained a specific injury to his neck during the Stanley Cup playoffs against the Los Angeles Kings at the end of the 1988-1989 season [MOH, 4:5-7].

Applicant testified that he continued suffering the same problems over the next five years [MOH, 4:5-13].

Applicant testified as to multiple surgeries in California [MOH, 4:14-22].

The applicant testified as to a neck injury in Los Angeles during a fight [MOH, 5:7-9].

The applicant testified as to a concussive injury in Los Angeles during a fight [MOH, 5:10-12].

1 Furthermore, although not dispositive, the court takes judicial notice of the 2 fact that the applicant paid California income tax for each game he played within California.

3 The Court notes that the PQME in this case stated in his report dated 4 11/4/15 [that applicant sustained cumulative trauma injury while playing professional hockey and there is no basis for apportionment].

5 The Court notes that this is the only medical report offered into evidence 6 and would appear dispositive as to the issue.

7 Finally, the Court references Peter Forsberg v. Nashville Predators, et al.
(March 25, 2015) ADJ8710981.

8 In the Forsberg matter, a professional hockey player filed a cumulative 9 trauma claim with a similar fact pattern and similar playing time(s).
California jurisdiction was found in this matter.

10 The Court found that these factors established that California has a 11 substantial and legitimate interest regarding this injured worker's industrial injury.

12 DISCUSSION

13
14 As the WCJ notes in his Report, it has long been recognized that the WCAB has exclusive subject 15 matter jurisdiction to hear claims of industrial injury when the claimed injury or portion of the injurious 16 exposure causing the injury occurred in California. (Cal. Const., Article XIV, § 4; Lab. Code, § 3202 17 [the Act is to “be liberally construed by the courts with the purpose of extending their benefits for the 18 protection of persons injured in the course of their employment”]; Lab. Code, § 3600.5, 5300, 5301; 19 Daily v. Dallas Carriers Corp. (1996) 43 Cal.App.4th 720, 726 [61 Cal.Comp.Cases 216] [“[T]he 20 California Workers’ Compensation Act applies to a worker employed in another state who is injured 21 while working in California”]; McKinley, supra, 78 Cal.Comp.Cases at p. 27 [the WCAB will exercise 22 jurisdiction “over claims of cumulative industrial injury when a portion of the injurious exposure causing 23 the cumulative injury occurred within the state.”].)

24 It is the Legislature that holds plenary authority under the state constitution to define the subject 25 matter jurisdiction of the WCAB. (Stevens v. Workers’ Comp. Appeals Bd. (2015) 241 Cal.App.4th 26 1074, 1092 [80 Cal.Comp.Cases 1262] [Under the California Constitution, article XIV, section 4, the 27 Legislature “is ... expressly vested with plenary power, unlimited by any provision of this Constitution,

1 to create, and enforce a complete system of workers' compensation, by appropriate legislation," italics 2 deleted].)

3 The issue raised by Johnson involves the "threshold" due process question concerning a 4 defendant's participation in a workers' compensation case in California, which is described by the Court 5 in that case in pertinent part as follows:

6 The issue... is which state's workers' compensation law applies, not which 7 state has personal jurisdiction. The issue may be characterized as a 8 'conflicts issue,' which arises when there are contacts in multiple states.
9 But here, we must decide if California law may be invoked at all. Thus, 10 'the question of jurisdiction ordinarily precedes the conflict of laws 11 question, for only after the [workers' compensation] commissioner 12 determines that he has authority to entertain the action does he proceed to 13 the 'choice' of whether to award benefits under our Workers' 14 Compensation Act or, rather, to defer to the earlier grant of benefits under 15 the laws of another state' Thus, the WCJ's determination that '[p]laying in 16 even one professional basketball game in California is sufficient to 17 establish jurisdiction' mischaracterizes the issue, which is not one of 18 personal jurisdiction but rather one of whether one or more state 19 compensation laws apply and whether in this case California may provide a 20 forum for the claim....

21 [W]hether California's workers compensation law governs depends on the 22 application of the due process clause of the United States Constitution. If 23 an employer or the insurer is subject to the workers' compensation law of a 24 state that does not have a sufficient connection to the matter they are 25 deprived of due process. Also, the determination may depend on the 26 application of the full faith and credit clause of the United States 27 Constitution. That is, if the workers' compensation law of another state exclusively should apply and California does not have a sufficient contact with the matter, California must, under the full faith and credit clause, accede to the other state to provide a forum...

We are not, therefore, faced with an issue of which law to apply, but only with whether California's workers' compensation law applies in this case.
That issue has been framed as one of due process under the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution. If this state lacks a sufficient relationship with Johnson's injuries, to require the petitioner—the employer—to defend the case here would be a denial of due process such that the courts of this state do not have authority to act. This might be referred to as a lack of subject matter jurisdiction. (Johnson, supra, 221 Cal.App.4th at p. 1121-1123, 1128, citations deleted, italics added.)

28 The statement in Johnson that the due process issue addressed by the Court "might" be referred to 29 as a "lack of subject matter jurisdiction" shows that the issue did not involve the "entire absence of 30 power to hear or determine the case," which is subject matter jurisdiction in its most fundamental sense.

1 (See Abelleira v. Dist. Court of Appeal (1941) 17 Cal.2d 280, 288-289 [“The concept of jurisdiction 2 embraces a large number of ideas of similar character...Lack of jurisdiction in its most fundamental or 3 strict sense means an entire absence of power to hear or determine the case, an absence of authority over 4 the subject matter or the parties”]; New York Knickerbockers v. Workers’ Compensation Appeals Board 5 (Macklin) (2015) 240 Cal.App.4th 1229, 1232 n.1 [80 Cal.Comp.Cases 1441] (Macklin.) Instead, 6 Johnson analogizes the “due process” concept it addresses to an idea of similar character that is one of 7 the “less fundamental circumstances” where the word “jurisdiction” is used, as noted in Macklin, supra, 8 240 Cal.App.4th at p. 1232, fn. 1.)

9 Thus, the question under Johnson is whether applicant’s contacts with California provide 10 sufficient interest in the matter to apply this state’s workers’ compensation law as a matter of 11 constitutional due process. Here, the WCJ correctly found that the applicant’s participation in 59 12 professional hockey games and practices in California supports the invocation of California law.

13 In Johnson, the Court of Appeal concluded that the injured worker’s participation in one women’s 14 professional basketball game in California did not provide the state with a “legitimate interest in the 15 injury” because the connection between it and the state could not be “traced factually to one game” and 16 was “at best de minimis.” (Johnson, supra, 221 Cal.App.4th at 1130, emphasis in original.)<sup>2</sup>

17 The record in this case shows that the injurious exposure applicant sustained during his 59 games 18 and practices in this state was more than a de minimis cause of his cumulative injury and defendants are 19 not denied due process by being held liable for the injury under the laws of California.

20 In addition, the Panthers did not prove entitlement to the one exemption from the provisions of 21 California’s workers’ compensation law allowed by the Legislature for out-of-state employers and

23 <sup>2</sup> The holding in Johnson implicitly recognizes that California has a “substantial” interest in an injury if there is more than a 24 “de minimis” connection to the state. That view is consistent with the Supreme Court’s construction of the language in 25 Government Code section 31720 which provides for a service-connected disability pension only if the employee’s incapacity 26 is “a result of injury or disease arising out of and in the course of the member’s employment, and such employment 27 contributes substantially to such incapacity.” (Emphasis added.) As held by the Supreme Court, the statutory standard of “contributes substantially” is “far less restrictive” than a tort definition of probable cause, and it is met if the evidence shows a “real and measurable” connection between the disability and the employment that is more than “infinitesimal” or “inconsequential.” (Bowen v. Board of Retirement (1986) 42 Cal.3d 572, 578, fn. 4 [51 Cal.Comp.Cases 639] citing Gatewood v. Board of Retirement (1985) 175 Cal.App.3d 311, 319 and DePuy v. Board of Retirement (1978) 87 Cal.App.3d 392.)

1 employees. (Former Lab. Code, § 3600.5(b).)<sup>3</sup> For that statutory exemption to apply, the employer must 2 show that it has similar workers' compensation coverage under the laws of another state that covers the 3 employee's work while in this state, and that the other state recognizes California's extraterritorial 4 provisions, and that the other state likewise exempts California employers and employees from the 5 application of its workers' compensation laws. (Id; Carroll v. Cincinnati Browns (2013) 78 6 Cal.Comp.Cases 655 (Appeals Board en banc) (Carroll).) In short, to obtain the former section 7 3600.5(b) exemption the employer must prove that the injured worker had similar workers' 8 compensation coverage on a reciprocal basis while working in this state.

9 The record in this case does not support a statutory exemption for any employer from the 10 application of California's workers' compensation laws as allowed by former section 3600.5(b). The 11 only evidence of a reciprocal statute is the Florida reciprocity statute received as Exhibit C. However, 12 that statute was not in existence when applicant was employed by the Panthers, and the employer cannot 13 now claim the exemption provided in section 3600.5(b).

14 Section 3600.5(b) on its face requires that the conditions required by that statute must exist, 15 "while the employee is temporarily within this state doing work for his or her employer." In that Florida 16 did not have a statute that reciprocated the provisions of section 3600.5(b) at the time applicant incurred 17 injurious exposure while working in California, the Panthers are not entitled to the section 3600.5(b) 18 exemption from California's workers' compensation law. It does not matter that the Florida statute 19 includes a provision that states that it is effective as to claims made on or after July 1, 2011. While that 20 provision may apply to claims made under Florida law, the Florida legislature has no jurisdiction or

<sup>3</sup> Former section 3600.5(b) provided in pertinent part as follows: "Any employee who has been hired outside of this state 22 and his employer shall be exempted from the provisions of this division while such employee is temporarily within this state 23 doing work for his employer if such employer has furnished workmen's compensation insurance coverage under the 24 workmen's compensation insurance or similar laws of a state other than California, so as to cover such employee's 25 employment while in this state; provided, the extraterritorial provisions of this division are recognized in such other state and 26 provided employers and employees who are covered in this state are likewise exempted from the application of the workmen's 27 compensation insurance or similar laws of such other state."

25 Section 3600.5 was subsequently amended to specifically address claims by certain professional athletes, but those 26 amendments only apply to claims filed "on or after September 15, 2013," and the claim in this case was filed before that date.
27 (Lab. Code, 3500.5(h).) The new quantum requirement established by the Legislature is similar to those of some other states, such as New Jersey, which had previously established a statutory quantum for workers' compensation jurisdiction. (See, Williams v. Port Authority of New York (2003) 175 N.J. 82; 813 A2d 531.)

1 authority to change the content or scope of California's statutes. The Panthers cannot now claim an 2 after-the-fact exemption from California law based upon a Florida statute that was not in existence during 3 the time it employed applicant.

4 The medical evidence establishes that it is reasonably probable that applicant sustained 5 cumulative trauma industrial injury in connection with his work as a professional hockey player, and it 6 further shows that the injurious exposure he sustained while working in California was more than a de 7 minimis cause of that injury. (McAllister v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1968) 69 Cal.2d 408 [33 8 Cal.Comp.Cases 660]; Rosas v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1993) 16 Cal.App.4th 1692 [58
9 Cal.Comp.Cases 313].) California has a legitimate, fundamental public policy interest in adjudicating 10 claims for workers' compensation for injuries sustained within this state, and the connection between the 11 claimed cumulative injury and California is sufficient to support the application of this state's workers' 12 compensation laws without violating due process. The WCJ's finding is affirmed.

1 DISSENTING OPINION OF COMMISSIONER ZALEWSKI

2 I dissent. The holding of the Court in Johnson is determinative. In order to adjudicate a claim for 3 workers' compensation the interest of the forum state must be "legitimate and substantial in itself."
4 (Johnson, supra, 221 Cal.App.4th at 1124, quoting 9 Larson, § 142.03[5], p. 142-9, fn. omitted.) In this 5 case, the connection between the claimed injury and the state is not sufficient to support the application 6 of this state's workers' compensation laws over defendants as a matter of due process.

7 Applicant is not a resident of this state and was never regularly employed in this state. None of 8 his employers were located in this state. The large majority of applicant's work duties were performed 9 outside of California. The only connection between the claimed injury and this state is the fact that 10 applicant temporarily came into California on occasion to practice and play in hockey games. The 11 question under Johnson is whether applicant's few games and practices in California establish a 12 legitimate and substantial connection between the claimed injury and this state that allows the application 13 of California's workers' compensation laws over defendants as a matter of due process. I conclude that 14 they do not.

15 Over his 23 year career, applicant participated in a total of 1,399 professional hockey games in 16 the NHL. However, only 59 of those games (approximately 4.2%) were in California. Those few games 17 compared to the total number applicant played in other states do not establish a legitimate and substantial 18 connection between the claimed injury and this state.

19 In Johnson, the Court addressed the cumulative injury claim of a nonresident basketball player 20 who was never employed by any California team, who played a single game in California, who sustained 21 no specific injury in California, and who received no medical treatment in California. The Court held 22 that, under those circumstances, California did not have a sufficient interest in the injury, stating among 23 other things as follows:

24 "The effects of participating in one of 34 games do not amount to a 25 cumulative injury warranting the invocation of California law. As the 26 cases show, a state must have a legitimate interest in the injury. A single 27 basketball game played by a professional player does not create a legitimate interest in injuries that cannot be traced factually to one game."
(Johnson, supra, 221 Cal.App.4th at 1130, emphasis in original.)

1           Johnson does not provide a mathematical formula for determining when the state's laws may be 2 constitutionally applied, and there is no bright line about how long an out-of-state employee must have 3 worked in California. Instead, each claim must be assessed on a case-by-case basis. The factors relevant 4 to that analysis appear to include, but are not necessarily limited to the following: (1) how long the 5 injurious employment in California was in relation to the overall injurious employment (i.e., a 6 quantitative factor); and (2) the extent to which the microtrauma in California causally contributed to the 7 cumulative injury, e.g., whether the microtrauma sustained in the state was relatively long, intense, or 8 severe in relation to the out-of-state work activities that also contributed to the cumulative trauma (i.e., a 9 qualitative factor).

10           In considering whether the state has a legitimate and substantial connection to the injury, I am 11 also guided by the view of the Legislature at the time it amended section 3600.5 to specifically address 12 claims by certain professional athletes.<sup>4</sup> In the Assembly Floor Analysis of Assembly Bill 1309, the 13 purposes of those amendments were described as follows:

14           According to the author, out of state professional athletes are taking 15 advantage of loopholes in California's workers' compensation system to 16 the detriment of substantial California interests, and to the detriment of 17 California sports teams. Specifically, as a result of the 'last employer over 18 which California has jurisdiction' rule, and the absence of an enforceable 19 one-year limitations period, California teams are facing cumulative injury 20 claims from players with extremely minimal California contacts, but 21 substantial playing histories for teams in other states. In addition, out of 22 state sports teams are having claims filed against them in California that 23 are resulting in a number of serious consequences to California, including: 24 1) clogging the workers' compensation courts with cases that should be 25 filed in another state, thereby delaying cases of California employees, 2) 26 causing all insured California employers to absorb rapidly escalating costs 27 being incurred by CIGA, and 3) placing increasing pressure on insurers to raise workers' compensation rates generally in California to cover these rapidly rising unanticipated expenses. In many of these cases the players have already received workers' compensation benefits from other states, as well as employment benefits covering the same losses they are seeking compensation for in California.

"With respect to an occupational disease or cumulative injury, a professional athlete and his or her employer shall be exempt from this division... unless both of the following conditions are satisfied:
(A) The professional athlete has, over the course of his or her professional athletic career, worked for two or more seasons for a California-based team or teams, or the professional athlete has, over the course of his or her professional athletic career, worked 20 percent or more of his or her duty days either in California or for a California-based team...
(B) The professional athlete has, over the course of his or her professional athletic career, worked for fewer than seven seasons for any team or teams other than a California-based team or teams as defined in this section." (Emphasis added.)

1 In this case, applicant's presence in California for about 4.2% of his games is far less than the 2 20% threshold now required by section 3600.5 for the WCAB to exercise jurisdiction. While the 20% 3 threshold set forth in current section 3600.5(b) does not apply to the claim in this case, it is reasonable to 4 consider that percentage as constituting a legitimate and substantial connection between California and 5 the injury as described in Johnson.<sup>5</sup>

6 While applicant may have been exposed to injurious trauma in California that contributed to 7 causing his cumulative injury, that is not sufficient in itself to support the application of this state's 8 workers' compensation laws. Instead, as held in Johnson, the connection between the claimed injury and 9 California must be sufficient to support application of this state's workers' compensation laws. Such a 10 connection is not established on this record.

11 Nothing in applicant's testimony (or in the medical evidence) suggests that applicant's games in 12 California were qualitatively more traumatic than his other games. While he claims to have incurred 13 specific injuries, those are not at issue. Treatment was routine for all games and does not give rise to a 14 presumption of liability or compel the WCAB to adjudicate the cumulative injury claim. (Lab. Code, §§ 15 5401 and 5402; Johnson, supra.)

16 In the absence of a contrary published decision by the Supreme Court or another Court of Appeal, 17 the WCAB is bound to follow the legal principle set forth in Johnson. (Auto Equity Sales, Inc. v.
18 Superior Court (1962) 57 Cal.2d 450, 455; Brannen v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1996) 46 19 Cal.App.4th 377, 384, fn. 5 [61 Cal.Comp.Cases 554].) For the WCAB to lawfully adjudicate a claim of 20 industrial injury, California must have legitimate and substantial connection to the injury. An employer 21 or insurer is deprived of due process if subjected to the workers' compensation law of a state that does 22 not have a legitimate connection to the injury that makes application of the state's laws reasonable. (Id.
23 221 Cal.App.4th at 1128.)

24 _____
25 <sup>5</sup> The holding of the Court in Johnson is consistent with the earlier en banc decision of the Appeals Board in McKinley.
26 During four years of employment by the Arizona Cardinals Mr. McKinley participated in a five-day training camp and seven 27 football games in California. However, that "limited connection" was found in McKinley to be "insufficient" for the WCAB to adjudicate his claim for workers' compensation "in derogation of the Arizona forum he and the Cardinals reasonably identified in their employment contracts as the place where any claim for workers' compensation would be filed." (McKinley, supra, 78 Cal.Comp.Cases at pp. 30-31).

1 Applicant's few contacts with this state are not sufficient to support the application of this state's 2 workers' compensation laws. I would rescind the WCJ's June 3, 2016 decision and enter a new finding 3 consistent with the holding in Johnson that there is not a sufficient relationship between this state and the 4 claimed cumulative injury to allow the application of California's workers' compensation law against the 5 defendants as a matter of due process.
